Strengthening Families through Home Visiting

The Parent-Child Home Program Curriculum:

Builds Protective Factors Against Abuse and Neglect and Increases Positive Parenting

The table below outlines five protective factors that reduce the risk of child abuse and neglect and the corresponding Parent-Child Home Program Curriculum Inputs/Outputs. These five protective factors have been identified by the Strengthening Families National Network as factors that all effective child abuse prevention efforts should focus on developing in their work with families.

Protective Factor	The Parent-Child Home Program: Inputs/Outputs
Knowledge of parenting and child development	Home Visitors model positive parent-child interaction behaviors: Over the two years of home visits, these parental behaviors (and others) develop or increase: <ul style="list-style-type: none">• Parent gives child directions and encourages child to follow them• Parent works with child to perform age appropriate activities• Parent tries to converse with child• Parent shows warmth toward child• Parent responds verbally to child’s verbal or non-verbal requests for attention• Parent verbalizes approval and affection toward the child• Parent satisfies child’s needs, signaled verbally or non-verbally• Parent provides a verbal rationale for obedience• Parent comforts child In an evaluation of Parent-Child Home Program sites in Seattle, parents progressed from average scoring between “Never” and “Sometimes” when they began the Program to average scoring between “Sometimes” and “Most of the time” at the end of the first program year. At the end of the second program year, parents were scoring between “Most of the time” and “Always.”

Protective Factor	The Parent-Child Home Program: Inputs/Outputs
Social Connections	Intensity of the model: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> • Minimum of 46 Home Visits each program year (92 over two-year period) • Two visits per week Parents build important social connections with Home Visitor and with community services: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> • Trust relationship that develops between parent and Home Visitor empowers parent to seek/follow-up on referrals to other services and join in community-based activities (story time at the library, etc.) • The Parent-Child Home Program Coordinator works with families to connect them to other community-based services, supports, and opportunities. Program staff also help families identify/register for the next best educational opportunity for their children, i.e. pre-K, Head Start. • Parent-Child Home Program sites are well-established partners in the communities they serve. In addition to providing referrals, many of our sites offer playgroups or other parenting support programs which create opportunities for program participants to have social interactions and build social connections.
Concrete support in times of need	Intensity of the model: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> • Minimum of 46 Home Visits year (92 over two year period) • Two visits per week The regular presence of well-trained, well-supervised Home Visitors provides a consistent support system. The Parent-Child Home Program Coordinator works with families to connect them to other community-based services, supports, and opportunities. The Parent-Child Home Program’s curriculum/design facilitates opportunities for meaningful relationships and support between the Home Visitor and the family.
Parental resilience	Intensity of the model: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> • Minimum of 46 Home Visits year (92 over two year period) • Two visits per week Promotes emotional well-being for both parent and child through positive interactions – reading, conversation, and play experiences.
